

Now that you have an idea of what type of learning will help you meet your work and career goals, it's time for you to connect with people who can share their street smarts with you.

Do you know someone who has the type of education and learning you're interested in?

Ask them if they'd be willing to share their experience and knowledge with you.

If you don't know someone, ask your school or vocational counselor if they could recommend someone who you could talk with.

Let's Get Started

Here are some questions to get you started – but don't limit yourself to these! What do YOU want to know?

Who are you interviewing? _____

What education path are you thinking of taking?

Who was helpful to you in planning what classes to take in high school?

Who helped you prepare for your future?

What was the most challenging thing about choosing what to do after high school?

What are some things I can do in high school to prepare for my future?

Do you need any accommodations?

- If so, who helps you get them?
- Do you have any difficulties getting these accommodations?

Do you live on your own?

- If so, what do you like about it?

Do you get any financial assistance to help pay for expenses?

- If so, how did you get it?
